Visual Identity
Guidelines 1.0
2025

Introduction

This is your guide to the National College of Art & Design’s visual identity system.

Rooted in bold thinking, creative distinction and a spirit of curiosity, it reflects who we are, what we value, and where we’re going.

This guideline will show how we express the College’s purpose as a place of making, questioning, and imagining better futures.

National College of Art & Design

The National College
of Art & Design

The National College of Art & Design (NCAD) offers the richest and most diverse education in art and design in Ireland. Founded as the Dublin Society Drawing School in 1746, NCAD has been central to art and design in Ireland for over 270 years.

Located in the heart of the Liberties, a district where making and creating have been core activities since the twelfth century, our Thomas Street campus is currently home to a community of 1,500 undergraduate, graduate and part-time students across four disciplines: Design, Education, Fine Art and Visual Culture.

“We have a shared belief in the transformative potential of an NCAD education to equip our graduates with the bold curiosity and the new thinking which society critically needs. We are ambitious to find new ways to work with each other and the wider community, to continuously redefine and expand the boundaries of creative practice, to make a difference and, as our mission states, to change the world.” - Sarah Glennie, Director

of Art & Design

The National College of Art & Design is a creative force. Since our inception we have been endeavouring to change the world through bold and curious thinking, making and doing.

Internally, bold and curious thinking, making and doing is our methodology in purpose and practice. Externally it is our method through which we communicate the college as an impactful creative force.

¹
There are three basic activities of humans: theoria (thinking), poiesis (making) and praxis (doing).

Corresponding to these activities are three types of knowledge: theoretical (the end goal being truth), poietical (the end goal being production) and practical (the end goal being action).

– Aristotle

Name/ Language

Name

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

The National College of Art & Design (NCAD).

The acronym NCAD should only be used after it has been first introduced by the title National College of Art & Design. This applies to all written communications. Its only other use should be part of the verbal vernacular.

COLÁISTE NÁISIÚNTA EALAÍNE IS DEARTHA /
NATIONAL COLLEGE OF ART & DESIGN

Where possible, the Irish language translation should be used across all communications
When it does appear, it is important to be positioned before the english translation.

2

The province of the imagination
is a place where different interests
come together and are discovered.
Where the ordinary becomes extraordinary. Where realities are deconstructed and constructed.
Where fact and image are sundered
and reunited. It is a province of possibilities.

– Kearney & Hederman

3

Poetic imagination is how we use
our imagination to create something.
For example, to tell a story, to write a poem, to direct a film,
to paint something. Poetic imagination allows a person to break down their reality, their surroundings, and then to recreate and put back together that reality, but in doing so make something new.

– Samuel Coleridge

Geographically there are four provinces in Ireland. According to Irish folklore there is a fifth province². The fifth province being one that sits in the heart of Ireland and lives in the heart of us all. This ‘otherworld’ is known as the province of imagination.

Since its origins in the mid 1700s the National College of Art & Design has been a national and international driver of art, design, creativity and cultural & critical questioning.

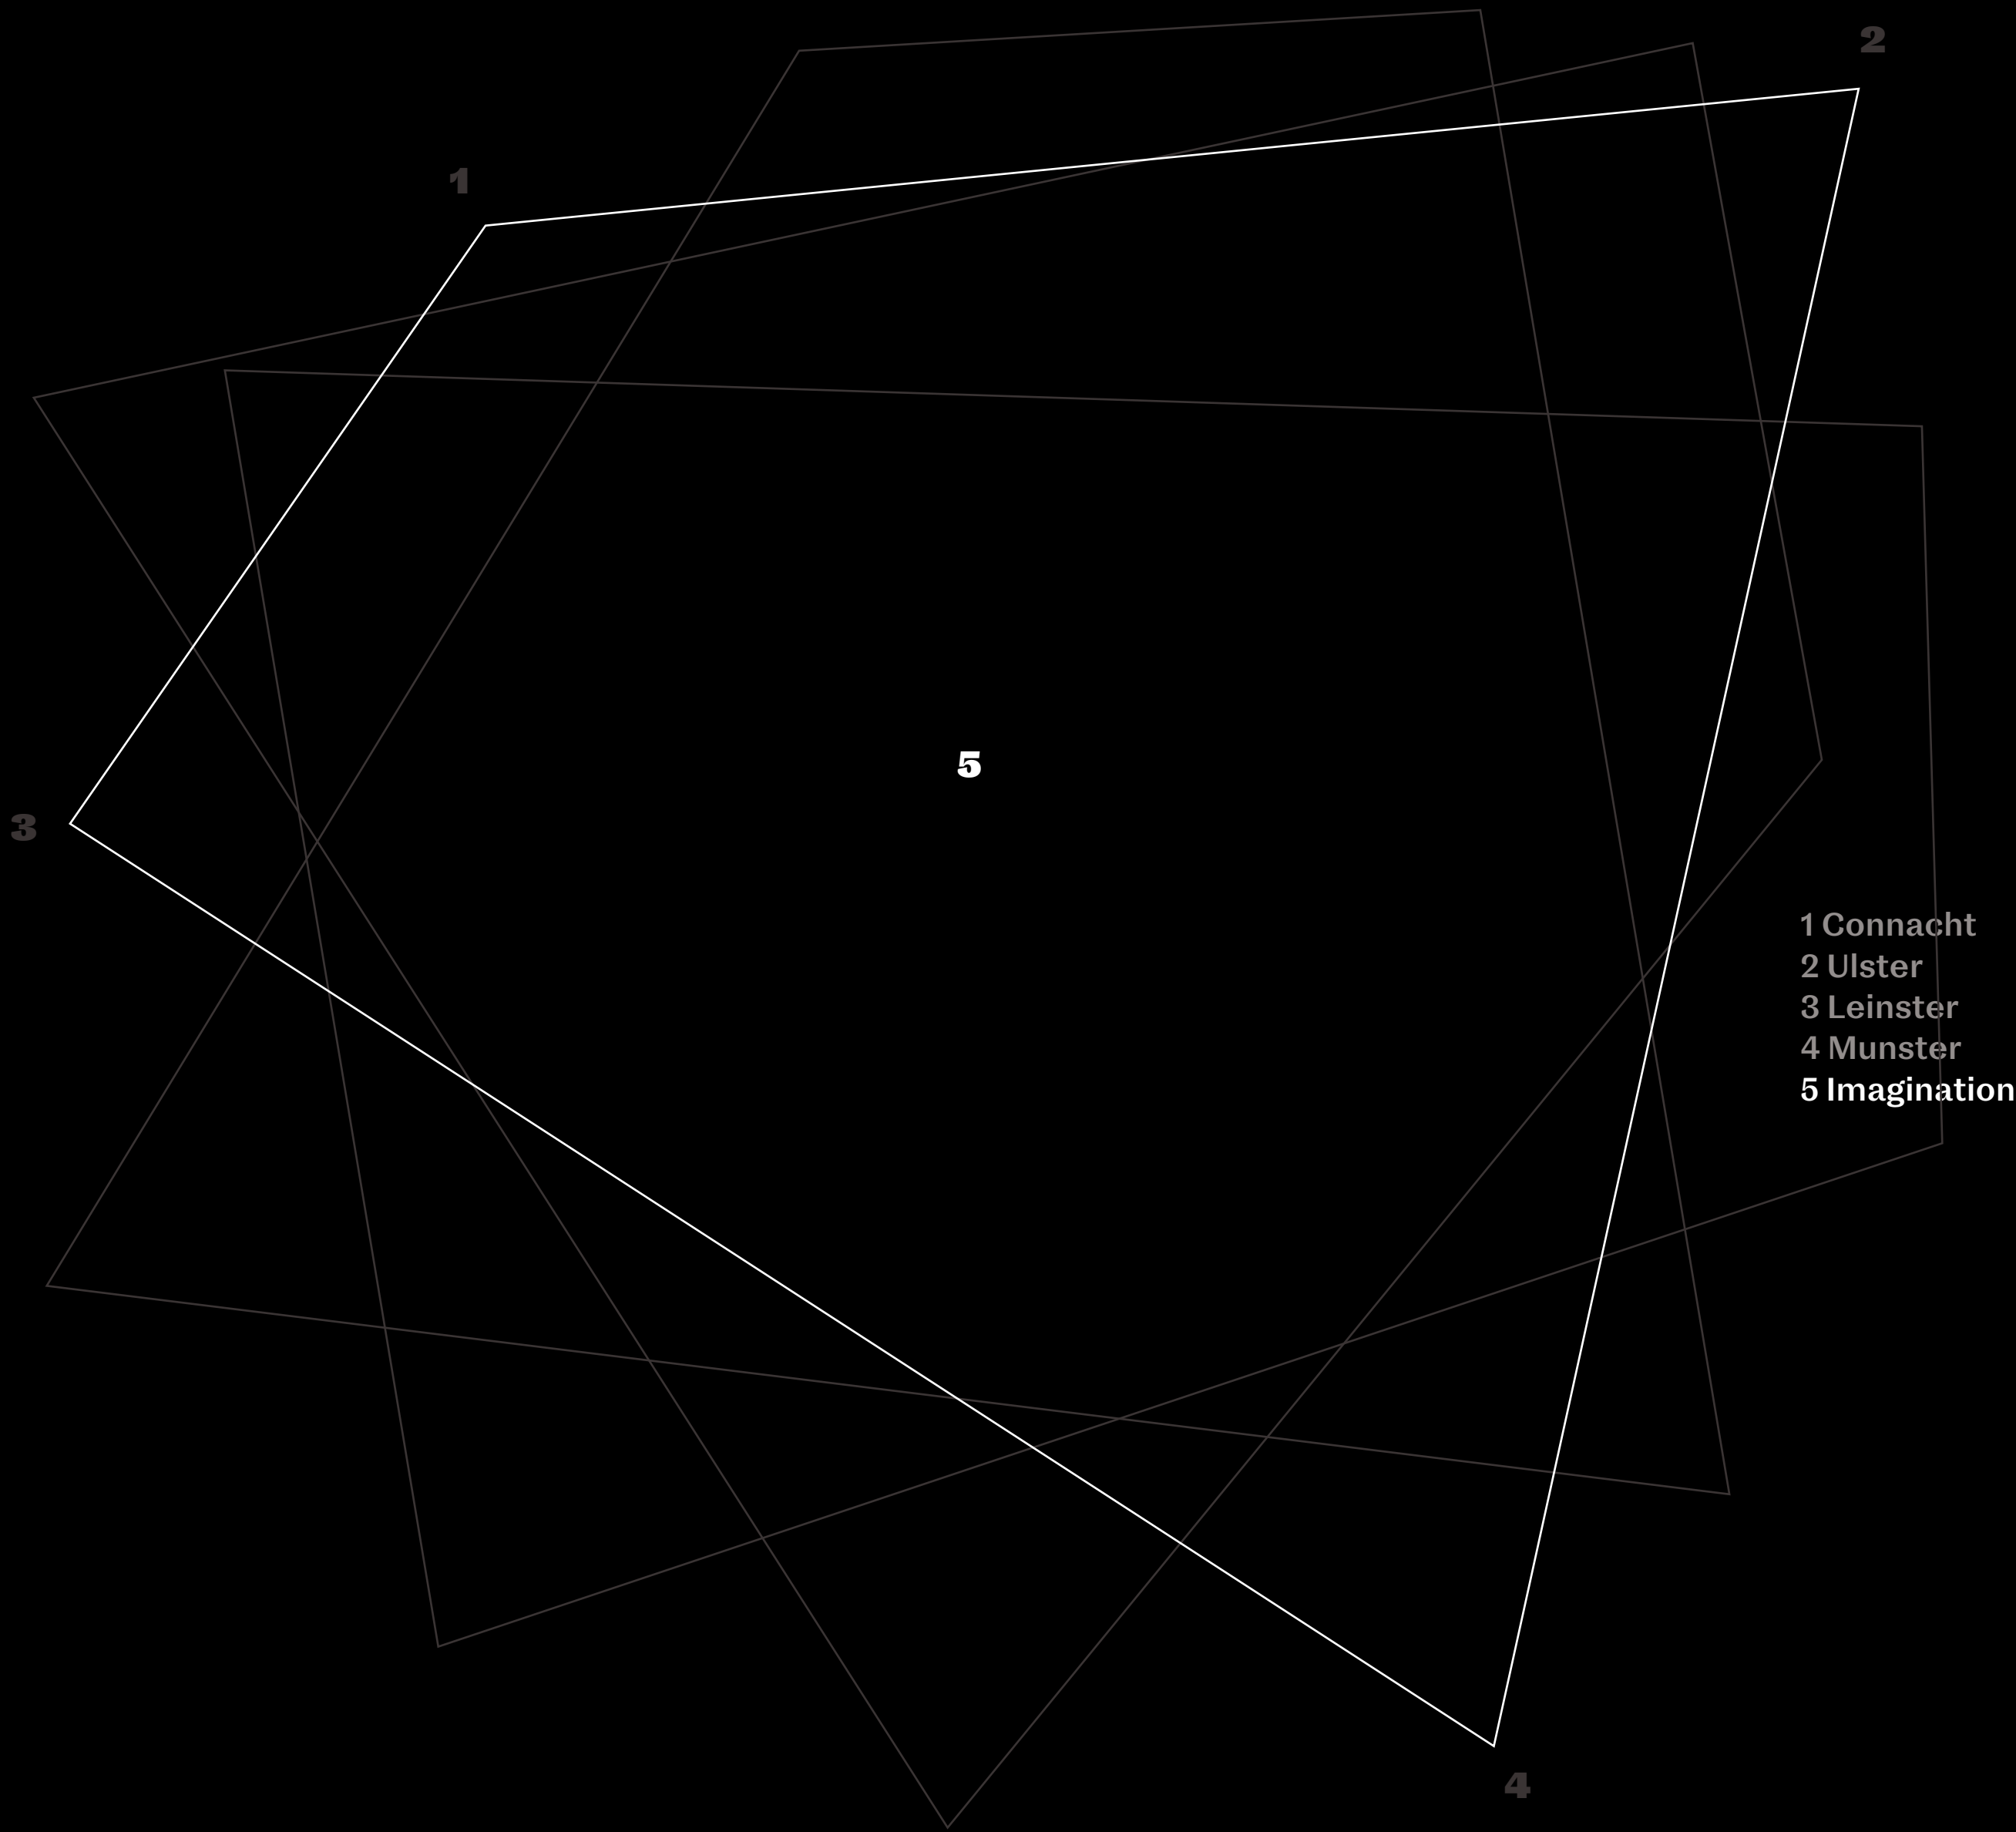

Our concept is clear ... The National College of Art & Design is a space where poetry³, play, curiosity and invention are at the heart of everything we do. It is a place where creative thinkers, makers and doers³ offer knowledge, truth and action. It is the province of imagination.

Logo Concept

The Fifth Province –
The Province of the Imagination

The dynamic shape created to highlight the fifth province has been incorporated in the logo
and logotypes of the College.

It is also used as a graphic device across various visual communication assets.

Social Media Icon

The Social Media Icon has been created as a distinctive circular mark to be used on all social media platforms.

No other icon should be used on official National College of Art & Design social media accounts.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

Initiative Logotype(s)

National College of Art & Design Initiatives that have been specially created can each be given their own initiative logotype.

These are created by combining National College of Art & Design plus the name of the initiative. The names are each drawn in a special ultra wide version of the College typeface (Spenser). Each name is also given a special typographic character.

No initiative logotype can be created without approval from the executive council.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

Each initiative has its own specific identity guidelines.

Typefaces

Primary Typeface
Spenser

Spenser represents a typographic extension of the typeface Bill, initially created for the National College of Art & Design in 2014.

Spenser’s high contrast, inward stroke endings, open counters, and compact descenders make it well-suited for both tight settings and continuous text. Its distinctive features render it suitable for larger, more impactful applications such as titles, covers, posters, and signage.

A select number of Spenser fonts will be made available to staff.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

Colours

Primary Colours

The National College of Art & Design’s primary colour palette begins with a neutral and minimal foundation: black and white.

Dark and Light Grey may also be used as secondary colours. These colours should be used to support visual hierarchy and provide subtle contrast where needed.

RGB values should be used for all digital and screen-based applications. CMYK values should be used for all print materials to ensure colour accuracy and consistency.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

Volume Control

Visual Identity
Volume Control

To understand the different tonal levels voice and visual communications we use the analogy of a volume control button. Turned down, the identity system shows a base level of identity assets, turned up, the identity system shows a greater number of assets being used.

For internal use the volume controls are turned down, only using, logo/logotype(s), colour and typography.

As they are turned up Design/Advertising studios should be commissioned to help use the full toolkit of visual identity assets appropriately.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.

Volume Control

The visual identity volume control is also adjusted depending on context and audience and an understanding of the needs of all people involved.

The higher the volume, the greater the need for Design/Advertising studios to be involved and the National College of Art & Design Brand Identity Team to be consulted.

Following these guidelines is essential to ensure consistency, coherence and effective communication for the National College of Art & Design Visual Identity System.
